The Colombia conflict was the oldest war in the Americas. The feud spanned decades, with no end in sight, until a peace agreement was signed in November 2016 between the Colombian government and the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia.

Streaming on demand beginning Thursday, October 1 on Amazon Prime Video Direct and Vimeo (in English and Spanish), new documentary A Call For Peace examines the high-stakes international negotiation leading up to the historic agreement. It's the latest world success in peace agreements, now famously known as the Colombian Peace Process.

"A Call For Peace shows the world that despite what might seem like a hopeless situation, it's still possible to come to a level of peace that has never been attained before," said Co-Director/Producer Melodie Carli. "The Columbian Peace Process is proof for other countries involved in conflict that yes hope is still alive."

Added Co-Director/ Producer Juan Carlos Borrero, a Colombian native who grew up with the conflict, "I never thought I would see a day in my lifetime peace in Colombia, so when I saw that it was happening, I decided to tell this story."

A Call For Peace won Best Documentary at the Socially Relevant Film Festival NY 2020 and was an Official Selection at the Bogota Film Festival 2019. The film was also presented at the European Union Commission and Harvard Law School.

The producers are currently working on their latest film, HER. Their latest documentary highlights the stories of heroic women who shattered barriers to achieve excellence in their fields. Prior to the pandemic, HER filmed the incredible life stories of environmentalist/activist Wanjira Mathai in Kenya, Special Representative/Deputy Special Adviser of the UN Secretary-General to Cyprus, Elizabeth Spehar, and Major General Cheryl Pearce, UN Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus Commander. Production set for later this year.
